

The story's author, "A Letter to God", is G.L. Fuentes. He was one of the greatest writers of that time. He was a Mexican poet, novelist and also journalist. The story revolves around the idea of having unquestionable faith in God. The story here is the one taking place in a Latin American country. Lencho, a farmer, the protagonist of the story, writes a letter to God.

A Letter to God Class 10 Summary

A Letter to God is a story written by G.L. Fuentes, which depicts the firm faith of a poor and simple-minded farmer named Lencho in God. Lencho was poor yet a dedicated farmer. He was hoping for a decent harvest. To his dismay, a hailstorm suddenly destroyed all his crops and harvest completely. Seeing the damage, the poor farmer was taken aback and felt sad. However, he had a strong faith in God.

He was a learned man who knew how to read and write. Due to his straightforward nature, he was confident that God would help him. Thus, he drafted a letter to God while addressing his financial concerns. In the letter, he requested God to send him one hundred pesos to sow his fields again and save his family from starvation. Soon he wrote a letter and went to the post office. He placed a stamp on the letter and dropped it into the mailbox.

When the postman took out the letter from the letterbox, he laughed heartily after reading it. He immediately rushed to the postmaster and showed him the strange letter. The postmaster read the letter but laughed out loud when he noticed that the letter was addressed to God. However, he was also moved by the faith of the farmer with which the letter was written to God. He lauded the poor farmer's unquestionable faith in God and decided to help him.

Soon, he asked the post office employees to contribute some money as a charity and also gave a part of his salary so that Lencho's faith in God was not shaken. However, the money collected was a little less than what Lencho had requested from God. The postmaster then put all the money collected in an envelope and addressed it to the poor farmer.

The following Sunday, Lencho went to the post office to check if there was a letter for him. The postmaster gently handed over the letter to him. Lencho was not surprised at all to see the note with money inside the envelope. He confidently opened the envelope to count the money but became angry when he saw that there were only seventy pesos in it. He was sure that God could have never made such a grave mistake. He instantly went to the window to ask for paper and ink, wrote another letter to God, and dropped it into the letter-box.

When Lencho had left the place, the postmaster opened and read his letter immediately. In it, Lencho had complained to God that he had initially requested one hundred pesos, but he was upset to find only seventy pesos. Furthermore, he criticized the post office employees and felt they must have stolen the remaining thirty pesos from his envelope.

He urged God to send him the rest of the money since he urgently needed it. However, he requested God not to send the money through the mail because Lencho thought the post office employees were a bunch of crooks' who might have stolen the remaining money from the envelope.

A Letter to God Class 10 Notes:

A Letter to God Class 10 Notes Introduction:

The story's author, "A Letter to God", is G.L. Fuentes. He was one of the greatest writers of that time. He was a Mexican poet, novelist and also journalist. The story revolves around the idea of having unquestionable faith in God. The story here is the one taking place in a Latin American country. Lencho, a farmer, the protagonist of the story, writes a letter to God.

In the letter, he seeks help from the Almighty as he discovers a devastating hailstorm has destroyed his entire crop yield. Although his wishes get fulfilled partially, if not wholly, he remains ungrateful in the end. Moreover, he questions the honesty and modesty of the post-masters. However, these were the only beings who helped him with money (anonymously) in the name of God.

A Letter to God Class 10 Explanation:

Lencho, the farmer, lived in the only house on the top of a hill. The hill was low-heighted. From there, a river and a ready-to-harvest corn field were visible. The area belonged to Lencho, who had the utmost confidence that the harvest would reap significant profits. The only thing that he awaited was rainfall. In this hope, he spent an entire morning gazing at the sky in the northeast direction from where a drizzle was expected to shower on his field.

While looking at the sky, the man confidently tells his wife that they will have a rain shower, to which the lady replies by saying, only if everything happens as they hope and expect. Their elder children were working at the field, and the younger ones were playing near the house when Lencho's wife called everyone for dinner.

It is during that time drops of rain begin to fall, at this moment proving the farmer's prediction to be true. The wind was pleasant, and clouds could be seen approaching from the northeast sky. Lencho goes out of the house to take pleasure in feeling the droplets on his body. He refers to the drizzle as coins, large droplets equivalent to ten cents and the smaller ones, five cents. He says so because these raindrops would ensure a good crop which would eventually get them a lot of money.

On seeing everything go as expected, Lencho reflected upon the field and the flowers covered with droplets which seemed as if they were wrapped in a curtain. Unexpectedly, a strong wind started blowing, leading to a hailstorm. Satirically, the writer refers to these pellets of frozen rain as "new silver coins." The innocent boys became playful and went out in the rain to play and collect these hailstones, which looked like "frozen pearls".

The farmer now starts worrying and hopes the storm gets over quickly, which, to his utmost disappointment, didn't. The hailstones covered the entire valley, including the house, garden, hillside, and cornfield. It made everything look so white that it seemed as if it was covered in salt.

Lencho became stressed and disappointed as everything went against plan. The trees had shed their leaves, corns were smashed, and the flowers had also fallen from their plants. While standing in the withered fields, he conveyed his dismay and sorrow to his sons by commenting that the effect of the storm proved to be worse than that of crop-destroying insects. All their hard work had gone in vain. He felt helpless as no corn had been left and feared that they might have to starve this time.

Even after everything had gone southwards (gone wrong), the family still had hope in their hearts. They had faith in the almighty even after nothing was left. They supported each other and recalled a saying that assures no one ever dies of starvation.

Lencho spent his entire night thinking of the only option left, which was to seek God's help, who, he had been informed, has its eyes and ears everywhere. He thought of writing a letter to God conveying his grievances. Despite spending all these years working at the farm, he still knew how to write. He started writing on a Sunday morning and thought of mailing it himself by going to the town.

In his letter to God, he communicated his poverty-stricken situation and mentioned that he needed 100 pesos to regenerate the crops and survive until they were ready to harvest. On the envelope, He wrote, "To God; then, at the post office, placed a stamp on the letter and dropped it in the mailbox.

A postman, who was also an employee of the post office, noticed Lencho's letter and showed it to the postmaster. They both felt amused, but the fat and friendly postmaster immediately developed a sense of seriousness. He was astounded at the amount of faith Lencho had in God and wished he had the same.

With good intentions, the postmaster read the letter and thought of replying to it to keep the writer's belief intact. But the writer expected the reply differently that could not be fulfilled with pen, paper and morals. The farmer had demanded 100 pesos. The postmaster, along with his colleagues and a few friends, who were more than willing to donate for a good cause, collected a pool of money to help Lencho.

Despite his best efforts, he could only collect an amount not more than half of what was required. He then addressed it to Lencho along with a letter which God undersigned.

Next Sunday, Lencho came looking for the reply a bit earlier than expected. The postman handed him the letter waiting to see him joyful and surprised, while the postmaster, feeling satisfied, oversaw it from his office. On the contrary, the farmer got disheartened on seeing that the money was less than what he asked for. His faith is still undeterred, and he believes God cannot make such a mistake.

On being disappointed, he started looking for ink and paper to write to God again. While writing, his eyebrows got curled out of the concentration he was drafting a new request. On completing, he affixed it with a stamp. As soon as he dropped it into the mailbox, the postmaster took it out to read it. Lencho complained that he had only received 70 pesos and was really in need of the remaining amount. He doubted the integrity and honesty of the post office employees. He suggested that the money should not be sent via post because he suspected that the staff at the post office must have stolen the missing amount.

A Letter to God Class 10 Author:

Gregorio Lopez Y Fuentes was born on July 11, 1897, at Lanzarote in the Canary Islands. He first went to sea as a deck boy with his father at age ten. As a teenager, Fuentes worked on cargo ships from Canary Island to Trinidad and Puerto Rico. He also sailed to the Spanish parts of Valencia and Sevilla to South America. He migrated permanently to Cuba at the age of twenty-two. Fuentes, a lifelong cigar smoker, died from cancer in 2002 at the age of 105 years.

A Letter to God Class 10 Word Meaning:

1. Entire: Whole,taking all together
2. Valley: an area of low land between hills of mountains
3. crest: top
4. Ripe: Mature
5. Dotted with: Spread out here and there
6. Downpour: heavy rain
7. Shower: light shower of rain

8. Intimately: Closely
9. Supper: the last meal of the day
10. Exclaim: cry with surprise
11. Satisfied: contented
12. Hailstones: rain of snow
13. Regarded: thought
14. Crook: cheats, thugs
15. Fist: Closed palm
16. Licked: strike with tongue
17. Wrinkling: crease
18. Slightest: not even a little
19. Contentment: satisfaction
20. Evident: Clear

A Letter to God Class 10 Question and Answer:

1. What did Lencho hope for?

Ans. Lencho hoped for good rain, which was much needed for a good harvest.

2. Why did Lencho say the raindrops were like 'new coins'?

Ans. Lencho compared the raindrops with new coins because they promised him a good harvest resulting in more prosperity.

3. How did the rain change? What happened to Lencho's fields?

Ans. The rain changed into hailstones as a strong wind began to blow, and huge hailstones started to fall along with the rain. All the crops in Lencho's field got destroyed because of the weather conditions.

4. What did the postmaster do after reading a letter?

Ans. The postmaster laughed when he read Lencho's letter, but soon he became severe and was moved by the writer's faith in God. He didn't want to shake Lencho's faith. So, he decided to collect money and send it to Lencho on behalf of God.

5. Who or what did Lencho have faith in? What did he do?

Ans. Lencho had firm faith in God. He believed that God sees everything, even what is deep in one's conscience and helps everyone in one's problems. He wrote a letter to God demanding him a hundred pesos to sow his field again.

6. What made Lencho angry?

Ans. There were only seventy pesos in the envelope, whereas Lencho had demanded a hundred pesos. The difference in the amount made him angry.

A Letter to God Conclusion:

A Letter To God' is that extreme Faith in the almighty can give you a ray of hope even in the darkest time. It is a story of extreme Faith in God. "Faith can move mountains". Faith and hope are symbols of life.

We learnt that Faith has the power to give us what we want, to fulfil our needs. However, one must realise that humanity still prevails.

And the second we see in the story is that Humans don't trust humans, as we can see. In a lecture that lunch didn't trust post office employees. He thought that the post officer had taken him some money, but the reality was those post offices collected cash for lunch.