Reach for the Top Class 9 Summary

The two portions of Reach for the Top provide knowledge about Santosh Yadav and Maria Sharapova. Santosh introduces the first segment. Santosh was the first woman in history to climb Mount Everest twice when this story was written. It starts by stating that she was born in a culture that saw girls as a curse. But, as we find out, she was born in Haryana, and she goes against the flow of society to be herself.

She experienced gender prejudice from a young age and decided to forge her path. She traveled to Delhi to enroll, paying for her schooling only through part-time employment. After that, she moved into a hostel in Jaipur, where her life began to change. However, there was no turning back once she joined a mountaineering adventure.

In 1992, at the age of barely 20, she successfully ascended Mount Everest. She did it early and even used her oxygen to help another climber. She made India glad by making history, and the Indian government honored her with the Padma Shri award.

Part II continues, which concentrates on the well-known tennis star Maria Sharapova. Her path to dominating women's tennis is shown to us.

Her life's interior biography reveals that she became the best tennis player at a young age. She is from Siberia, Russia, and only moved away from home when she was nine years old to start her training for her ambition. At age 9, she was forced to leave her mother and relocate to Florida with her father.

In addition, her interests in singing, dancing, and fashion are shown. Finally, we discover that she thinks that even while finance does play a significant role, she has always sought to be the best.

Explanation (story)

Santosh Yadav is the only female climber of Mount Everest who has accomplished this feat twice. The sixth child of her parents, Santosh was born in the Haryana village of Joniya. With five brothers, she is the sole sibling.

Her parents were wealthy landowners. She could have been sent to Delhi to pursue her education, but she remained in the village to attend school. When she was sixteen, she refused to get married and told her parents that if she didn't get a good education, she wouldn't ever get married. They eventually gave in after she promised to start working a part-time job.

She decided to investigate the climbers' disappearance on her own. Few climbers who were there when she arrived urged her to try climbing. However, there was no turning back after that. By attending the Uttarkashi Nehru Institute of Mountaineering, Santosh saved money. Every year, she went on an adventure. She has strong determination, stamina, and mental grit. Her efforts eventually began to pay off. She joined the Aravalli mountaineers in 1988, and in 1992, she ascended Mount Everest at 19. In less than a year, Santosh joined the Indo-Nepalese Women's Expedition and established a record by being the first woman to have scaled Mount Everest twice.

She received the Padma Shri award, one of the country's highest honors.

On August 22, 2005, a Siberian teenager named Maria Sharapova rose to the Top of the tennis world rankings. When she was sent to America to train with her father when she was ten, her mother was compelled to stay behind. While he fought to support her, she supported her father. She became more determined and resilient as a result.

In 2004, she won the women's singles title at Wimbledon. Her rise from Siberia to the Top of women's tennis has moved many people.

She claims that despite her sacrifices, her hard work has been worthwhile. She claims that even though the US plays a significant role in her life, she is pleased to be a Russian and will compete for her country in the Olympics if they want.

She enjoys dancing, singing, and fashion. In addition, she likes to read Arthur Conan Doyle's books. Sharapova defies classification. She is talented, driven to achieve, and willing to make sacrifices. Although she is motivated by money, she is also driven by the ambition to be the best.

Notes

Part 1 :

Santosh Yadav was raised in a conventional household. Five brothers were hers. She was born in Haryana's little town of Joniawas. Santosh, which means satisfaction, was given to the daughter. Santosh, however, wasn't always happy with her position in a conventional way of living. Santosh liked shorts to the traditional Indian gowns that other girls wore.

Wealthy landowners, Santosh's parents could afford to send their kids to the best schools, even in the capital city of Delhi, which was not far away. Santosh, however, was constrained to attending the village school because it was the family's long-standing tradition.

When her parents objected to covering the cost of her schooling, she respectfully let them know that she intended to work part-time to help pay for her education expenses. Then, her parents agreed to cover the cost of her schooling.

Santosh moved to Jaipur after passing his high school exams. She took a room at Kasturba Hostel when she enrolled in Maharani College. The Aravalli Hills inspired her interest in mountaineering. She used her savings to join a course at the Nehru Institute of Mountaineering in Uttarkashi.

She constantly demonstrated her physical toughness and incredible mental fortitude. Finally, four years after timidly enquired whether she may join the Aravalli mountaineers, her diligence and commitment concluded in 1992. Santosh Yadav reached Mount Everest's summit at just twenty, making her the youngest person to do it. If her climbing prowess, physical health, and mental toughness astonished her superiors, fellow climbers were won over by her compassion for others and eagerness to collaborate with them.

Santosh Yadav gave special attention to a climber who was "lying lifeless at the South Col" during the 1992 Everest trip. Unfortunately, she was unable to save him. She saved Mohan Singh, another climber, who would have perished if she hadn't given him some of her oxygen. Within a year, Santosh was invited to attend an Indo-Nepalese Women's Expedition by a member of the group. She later achieved a second ascent of Everest. –

The Padma Shri Award was conferred to her. Santosh, an ardent environmentalist, also carried 500 pounds of trash from the Himalayas.

Part2 :

In Siberia, Russia, Maria Sharapova was born. She was a serene, assured, and amiable girl who took just four years to get to the top position.

Maris began her path to becoming the top female tennis player when she was nine. She traveled to America to pursue formal education. Only her father accompanied her on her trip to Florida. They were unable to take her mother with them due to visa limitations. For two years, she was forced to live without her mother. She yearned for her mother dearly, but her father could not spend much time with her because he worked long hours to pay for her schooling.

Maria was the youngest child in the training facility, and other kids bullied her. She became more challenging and more determined as a result of her training. She worked very hard to develop her self-care skills. She never considered giving up because she was adamant about achieving her objective. She won the Women's Single title at Wimbledon in 2004 thanks to her fierce drive and willpower. She rose to the top spot among female tennis players in the world in 2005.

Many children were motivated by Maria's journey. She considers all of her sacrifices to have been worthwhile. Maris's manner of responding made it evident that she was confident. She views perseverance as the key to success. Because she was born in Russia, Maria wants to represent her country in the Olympics. She also enjoys dancing, singing, and fashion. In addition, she enjoys reading and likes wearing fancy dresses.

Maria found success and popularity thanks to her talent, drive, and willingness to make sacrifices.
